Letter: Here are the facts

Wednesday, December 10, 2014

I share Larry Kirkland's (Letter to the Editor, Dec. 2) desire for factual information along with productive and honest discussion of climate change. Two days after Mr. Kirkland's letter appeared, the Daily News carried an Associated Press article which provided some of the specific evidence he requested. For example, according to the World Meteorological Organization, due to a rise in global average temperature of 1.03 degrees Fahrenheit during the first part of this year, 2014 is on track to be one of the hottest, and perhaps the hottest, year on record. (A WMO Press Release with more details is available at this shortened address: <http://goo.gl/65MjKk>.)

When I read statistics like that, I worry. All is not gloom and doom, however. The good news is that we can plan for future climate change. For an interesting, proactive approach that avoids top-down regulation, visit citizensclimatelobby.org.
